13th IAASS Conference

Building a Safe, Secure, and Sustainable Space

8-10 October 2024, Prague (CZ)

About IAASS

The International Association for the Advancement of Space Safety (IAASS), Legally established 16 April 2004 in the Netherlands, is a non-profit organization dedicated to furthering international cooperation and scientific advancement in the field of space systems safety. In 2004 IAASS became a member of the International Astronautical Federation (IAF). In 2006 former US Senator John Glenn, first American to orbit, became Honorary Member of the IAASS. In 2010 IAASS was granted Observer status at the United Nations COPUOS (Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space).

IAASS Conference

Every 18 months, the IAASS conference is the one moment when experts from all around the world come together to reflect and exchange information on a number of space safety, security, and sustainability topics of national and international interest. The conference is also a forum to nurture mutual understanding, trust, and the widest possible international cooperation in the peaceful, responsible, and shared use of space. The conference consists of:

- ▶ Plenary and splinter sessions
- ▶ Panel sessions dedicated to the discussion of 4 topics which require better attention in space programs
- ▶ Conference Award Gala dinner

The IAASS conference is endorsed by all major space agencies worldwide.

Why Becoming a Sponsor?

There are various reasons. Safety is a strategic business interest in the space industry, as in many other high-tech industries like commercial aviation, high speed trains, pharmaceuticals, etc. A faulty single product can kill people as well as the manufacturer's business. One or two accidents may cause the termination of a unique operational concept like it happened with the Shuttle and with the supersonic Concorde. A single major disaster can even endanger an entire industrial sector like it is happening in the nuclear power generation business after the Fukushima disaster.

For the above reasons supporting space safety education and independent research can contribute to the future wellbeing, progress and expansion of the entire space industry. Furthermore space industry, government organizations and agencies are also interested to develop and maintain a "safety culture" within their own organizations. The IAASS conference represents in this respect a unique opportunity. In particular it allows for cultural interactions between experts from all three communities operating in space, namely civil, military and commercial community.
